President's letter

I'd like to take this opportunity to share with you our vision and plans in several important areas: faculty expansion and curriculum development; technology improvements; student life; and athletics.

As our enrollment increases (266 freshmen this fall – 29 PEG students and 43 VWIL; 32 transfers; 17 new MAT students; and 119 new ADP students), we are making sure that we continue to provide the individual attention that is the hallmark of a Mary Baldwin College education. We are expanding Mary Baldwin College's full-time faculty so that we can continue to offer small classes and high quality. Currently, our student-to-faculty ratio is 11:1, and our average class size is 17.

In expanding our faculty, we are building on our strengths, as well as developing new specialties to meet the needs of our students. As of this fall, the college has three new full-time faculty in psychology, one in English, and one in communications. In the coming year, we will conduct national searches for additional faculty in the fields of business and computer science, as well as a faculty member to open an Adult Degree Program regional office in Northern Virginia.

As we look to the future, we know we must build on exceptional programs to make them even stronger, and so we are in the planning stages of developing a master's level program in psychology. Graduate programs have a beneficial impact on undergraduate studies because they bring additional resources to Mary Baldwin, which are then available to all students. This master's program will bring additional prestige to our college and, ultimately, enhance the value of a Mary Baldwin degree.

We are also well on the way to developing a master's level program in Shakespearean studies, as we reported in the spring issue of the Mary Baldwin Magazine. Shenandoah Shakespeare has broken ground for their Blackfriars Playhouse and will later build a replica of the Globe Theatre here in Staunton. Their plan is to make Staunton a major center for performance and study of Shakespeare. This provides a once-in-a-generation opportunity for us at Mary Baldwin to partner with another organization to build something that will be truly unique and valuable. Like a master's program in psychology, it will bring new resources and experiences to all our students.

Last year, as part of a library renovation project, we provided Internet access for study carrels, established a new information resources teaching lab, and significantly expanded our online services and resources for distance students. Over $3.4 million in contributions to our math and science initiative are helping us enhance our technological capabilities through equipment, training, faculty, facilities, and student scholarships.

Our next advance in technology is to offer student services in a whole new way, with more information available to students more conveniently. This year, students have access to registration and financial information via computer. They are able to search for courses meeting their individual needs, view their transcripts, check grades, review the balance on their accounts, and submit address changes online. In the coming year, we will begin testing online registration.

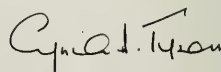

Thanks to a major grant from the New York-based Teagle Foundation, we are expanding services and support for students in other ways as well, especially in their transition from high school student to college student. This grant allows us to refocus the work of the Sena Center – now named the Rosemarie Sena Center for Career Planning and Freshman Services – to ensure that new on-campus students make a successful transition. The grant allows us to place freshmen in "FAST (freshman and sophomore transition) teams," small groups with assigned advisors and staff contact people.

As a college, we continue to look at how we bring an increasingly diverse student population together as a community with shared core values. As times change, our commitment to honesty, integrity, respect, and responsibility – represented by the Honor and Judicial Codes – remains firm. However, the issues that need to be resolved under those codes have become complex and difficult for the student councils responsible for enforcing them. So, I have appointed a special commission to examine the procedures for dealing with honor and judicial offenses. My charge to the commission, co-chaired by faculty members Dr. John L. Kibler III and Dr. Roderic L. Owen, is to present a plan for implementation by the end of December 2000.

The theme that runs through all these initiatives is responsiveness to the needs of our students in a fast-paced world. That is true of our athletics program as well. It has been growing in recent years, and we expect that intercollegiate sports at Mary Baldwin will continue to increase in importance, because more students want to be highly competitive. To meet this growing interest, we have reallocated funds to set up a varsity program in softball this fall and one in cross country in the fall of 2001. We are also investigating the possibility of joining a different athletic conference.

This is our great strength as a college: we look the present squarely in the eye, act quickly in response to a changing world, plan for the future, and continually seek new ways to serve our students better. This is Mary Baldwin College today.

Sincerely,

Cynthia H. Tyson
President

The Leadership INITIATIVE

MARY BALDWIN COLLEGE

$ 50 MILLION

MBC Approaches its Ambitious Goal

In October 1999, Charlotte Jackson Berry '51, chair of the Leadership Initiative, announced a $50 million capital campaign at Mary Baldwin. This will be the largest amount ever raised by any of the Virginia women's colleges.

To date, the campaign has successfully raised funds for a number of special projects at the college. These include the Health Care Administration program, leadership programming, the chaplaincy and religious programming, math/science and other endowed scholarships, and scientific and technology equipment purchases. The campaign's continuing success has provided funds for the renovations of McClung, the Administration Building, Pearce Science Center, and Grafton Library. These gifts have helped the Annual Fund reach an excess of $6.5 million over the last five years.

In April, the Board of Trustees wanted to deliver the good news about the Leadership Initiative to alumnae/i, parents, and friends. They traveled to Dallas, TX, and spent a grand Wednesday night celebrating with over 80 alumnae/i, parents, and friends at the Movie Studios at Las Colinas. All those gathered enjoyed a movie memorabilia tour and having their pictures taken in the Oval Office set from Oliver Stone's JFK.

The Texas celebration was so successful that the board decided to visit our alumnae/i in Richmond. On July 19, over 260 members of the MBC family joined at the Virginia Historical Society for music, food, and conversation. Charlotte Berry, Yum Arnold, and Dr. Tyson gave the campaign update and enthusiastically thanked the donors who were present.

While the campaign has done an outstanding job so far, certain projects still remain short of their funding goals. Undesignated dollars will help to complete these special projects and allow the Leadership Initiative campaign to make MBC history.

Be part of the good news. For more information about giving opportunities and upcoming events in your area, please contact the Office of Institutional Advancement at 800-622-4255.

PROFILES

in Leadership

Many generous gifts of time, talent and financial resources have contributed to the success of the Leadership Initiative

FRIEND OF THE COLLEGE

Mr. and Mrs. Hunter W. Henry Jr.

A gift of $150,000 by Mr. and Mrs. Hunter W. Henry Jr. has endowed scholarships at Mary Baldwin. Mr. Henry, former president of Dow Chemical USA and executive vice president of the Dow Chemical Company, graduated from Staunton Military Academy in 1946. He created the scholarships "to memorialize the love and sacrifice of [his] parents who gave [him] the opportunity to enrich his education and to preserve the legacy of SMA that made an indelible mark upon [him] and thousands of other young men." Henry credits his parents' example and his SMA experience for his success as a business, civic, and family leader.

Kristy M. Wheeler

The first award recognizing an outstanding ROTC cadet was presented this fall to VWIL 1st Captain Kristy M. Wheeler of Richmond, VA. Scholarships have also been established to provide financial assistance for descendants of SMA alumni, faculty, and staff.

VOLUNTEER

Ethel M. Smeak '53

"For my 40th reunion, I agreed to call ten of my best friends to ask them to contribute to our reunion class fund. The deadline arrived, and I could not place one call! I was just too afraid. However, I agreed to call ten classmates to solicit for our 45th reunion and I did! I had wonderful visits with classmates, and I had fun and success. So, when I was asked to serve on the Leadership Initiative Committee as a special advisor, I agreed. After all, an advisor does not have to ask for money. At my first meeting, I listened to the trustees' report on their fund-raising activities. I was in awe of their commitment to and belief in the college. Their efforts impressed me so much that I made a five-year pledge that very day.

Since then, I have done some solicitation with the help and guidance of the staff in Institutional Advancement. Everyone I solicited has been most gracious. It has been an exciting and rewarding experience. Many of us do not have much money, but we can still make a difference.

There are many ways to volunteer in support of Mary Baldwin. It is a worthwhile experience. Try it; I'm glad I did."

FACULTY STAFF

Dr. Elizabeth M. Hairfield and Hampton H. Hairfield Jr.

Dr. Elizabeth M. Hairfield, professor of chemistry and holder of the Caroline Rose Hunt Distinguished Chair in the Natural Sciences, and her husband, Hampton H. Hairfield Jr., chemistry laboratory instructor and specialist in resins and perfumes, have made a gift to recognize academic achievement by MBC students.

According to the Hairfields, establishing The Charles E. Rutenber and James B. Patrick Endowment for Excellence in Chemistry and Physics provided an opportunity for them to show their loyalty to MBC and to its outstanding science faculty. "Mary Baldwin College and Dr. James B. Patrick have played an important part in our lives for more than 30 years.

Although we knew Dr. Charles Rutenber for less than one quarter of that time, his friendship was very meaningful."

Honoree Dr. James B. Patrick, professor emeritus of chemistry, said, "Women can make outstanding contributions to humanity through the sciences, but are still underrepresented in the field. The habits of systematic thought that science requires are applicable in other areas and, in fact, many of our graduates in the sciences have gone on to make contributions in other areas as well."

The endowment is open to contributions from others who wish to honor Dr. Patrick or Dr. Rutenber and to provide financial assistance for students who excel in chemistry and physics.

ALUMNA

Lindsay Ryland '73

"My participation in Mary Baldwin's Oxford program created for me a love of things British, as well as a love of travel. So, when I was reviewing my estate plan with my attorney, I wanted to include a provision to provide future MBC students and faculty with international study opportunities. Because of tax laws, we decided my 401K was the ideal asset to fund my gift to Mary Baldwin. I continue to be impressed with Mary Baldwin's leadership in higher education. Opening our doors through such programs as VWIL, PEG, ADP, and MAT has ensured that we meet needs beyond those of traditional students. I am glad that I can make this commitment to MBC and hope other alumnae/i will consider similar gifts."

Rome Diary

by Sara Nair James '69, associate professor of art

For a decade, I have been fascinated by a series of fifteenth century murals begun by Fra Angelico and completed by Luca Signorelli in the cathedral of Orvieto in Italy. How the murals' unique combination of Last Judgement, apocalyptic, and literary scenes fit together especially intrigued me, and in my opinion no one had provided a convincing explanation. Research and intuition led me to investigate the Roman liturgy for a logical solution, and indeed, it provided many missing links. I needed verification, however, which meant research in dusty liturgical books in Italian libraries and in the archives in Orvieto. Rome seemed ideal: the Vatican Library holds the world's largest collection of liturgical books, and Orvieto lies an hour's train ride away, so I applied and was accepted as a visiting scholar at the American Academy in Rome for January and February 2000.

left: The Cappella Nuova in the cathedral of Orvieto. The Last Judgement frescoes on the ceiling were begun by Fra Angelico in 1447. Luca Signorelli was hired in 1499 to finish the ceiling. He then expanded the program into the upper walls to include additional scenes of Judgement, The Apocalypse. On the lower walls he painted author portraits surrounded by scenes from Dante's Divine Comedy and classical mythology.

Tuesday, January 18

I arrived in Rome today to temperatures of 50F and blue skies. After clearing customs and getting my luggage (marked "HEAVY" by US Airways), I took a train into the city and then a taxi to the American Academy, one of many national academies for art and scholarship in Rome.

The American Academy crowns the Janiculum Hill, the tallest hill within the walls of Rome but not one of the Canonical Seven. The century-old main building resembles an Italian villa, with four wings built at right angles around a cortile, or courtyard – the typical Italian "square doughnut" configuration. An open, vaulted walkway surrounds the quiet courtyard, and in the center, four tall cedars of Lebanon majestically frame a fountain. Inside, the ground floor houses public spaces. On the street side, a large "salone," with its big fireplace and grand piano, functions as a living room. A kitchen, formal dining room, and offices fill the rest of the wing. The library occupies the facing, quieter side of the building. A large reading room with big windows on the ground level invites scholars to be distracted by the lovely gardens outside. The upper two floors contain living quarters and studios.

As it will be every night but Sundays, my dinner was at 8:00 by candlelight. This is the primary social gathering of the day. The scene reminds me of E.M. Forster's novel A Room with a View – the rarified atmosphere, the diverse people whose common bond is Italy, and the stimulating dinner conversation. (I sat beside Deana Klepper from Williams College, who volunteered to shepherd me through the Vatican Library tomorrow.) Our waiter serves us four courses: pasta or soup, meat and vegetables, salad, and fruit or dessert. At 9:30, the lights are raised and everyone disperses.

Conversation usually revolves around research projects, this time Academy Director Lester Little of Smith College's research on the bubonic plague during the reign of Justinian (6th century), which was as devastating to Europe as the 1348 "Black Death." I learned that the plague continued sporadically in Europe until the 17th century, but was never again as disastrous as the 1348 bout. Interestingly, during that time it never crossed the Atlantic. The virulent disease moved quickly. Any sick aboard the sailing ships apparently either died or recovered before they got to the Americas.

Dean Lott Announces Retirement

by Sarah O'Connor

Mary Baldwin College without James D. Lott? It seems impossible. Yet, after 37 years at the college, 15 as dean, Lott has announced his retirement effective the end of the 2000-2001 academic year.

Professor, administrator, actor, author, community activist, church leader, raconteur, lecturer, father, husband. Lott has played all these roles and more. With his trademark Tennessee accent, perfect manners, graceful writing, and ready wit, he has entertained and shepherded both the college community and the broader community since he first moved to Staunton with his wife Pamela over 30 years ago.

Lott earned his B.A. at the University of Tennessee, his M.A. at Vanderbilt University, and his Ph.D. at the University of Wisconsin. Hired barely out of graduate school, Lott came to Mary Baldwin as an instructor of English in 1964. By 1976, he had achieved the rank of full professor and was appointed dean in 1986.

Lott's long tenure at the college has given him a unique perspective: "What attracted me to Mary Baldwin was the institutional commitment to high academic standards, the liberal arts, character development, and careful and caring teaching. These have stayed the same, and that's good and important to note. The major change has been in our increased diversity, both in our student body and our educational programs. The 'face' of our student population is more reflective of American society – in terms of race, economic status, and age – than was the case in 1964. Our programs – PEG, VWIL, ADP, and MAT – serve the educational needs of a world that is very different from the world in 1964. And, while we remain committed to the liberal arts, we have learned to focus more intentionally on how the liberal arts prepare students for life, careers, and leadership. We've changed incredibly, but we've remained true to our mission."

Lott is an 18th-century English literature scholar and an accomplished creative writer. While he was teaching and serving as dean of the college, he continued to publish short fiction and essays in numerous journals, including The Virginia Quarterly, The Southern Review and The Emrys Journal. In 1987, he won the O. Henry Award for Short Fiction for his story "The Janeites." This story was later reprinted in Prize Stories: The O. Henry Awards 1987. Lott also won the Emrys Prize for Short Fiction in 1986. He is listed in Writers in Virginia and in Poets and Writers. His publications have led to readings and workshops across the state – from Old Dominion University to Virginia Wesleyan University.

Lott has also been active professionally in many organizations. He has served since 1990 on the Steering Committee for the duPont Foundation Minority Scholars Program. From 1983 to 1986, he was the director of the summer program co-sponsored by MBC and Doshisha Women's College in Japan. He served five terms on the Fellowship and Grant Review Panel for the Virginia Foundation for the Humanities and Public Policy, three years on the Grant Review Panel for the Virginia Commission for the Arts, and one year on the review panel for the National Endowment for the Humanities. From 1982 to 1984, he was the director of the Mellon Foundation Six-College Faculty Development Program.

Along the way, Lott has made significant contributions to the local community. He chaired the Staunton Public Library Board from 1976 to 1982 and the Department of Mission Outreach for the Episcopal Diocese of Southwestern Virginia from 1979 to 1985. He was on the vestry of Emmanuel Episcopal Church from 1984 to 1986 and served as senior warden from 1992 to 1993. Other boards on which he has taken leadership positions include the Woodrow Wilson Birthplace Foundation, Historic Staunton Foundation, Habitat for Humanity, Amnesty International, the Staunton Fine Arts Association, and the Staunton Salvation Army.

Registrar Lewis Askegaard has worked closely with Lott for 17 years. He said, "No matter what kind of pressures he has faced, I've never caught him depressed or in a bad mood. He's never more than a word or two from a smile and a chuckle. He is blessed with the kind of wisdom that never lets him lose perspective and the kind of generosity of spirit that lets him shrug off issues that would leave most of us muttering to ourselves. We've been through some tough times together — budget crises, tenure decisions, faculty uproar, legal threats, the kinds of things it's hard to laugh at. But no matter how hard things are, Jim is always Jim."

President Cynthia H. Tyson said, "He has given us academic leadership of stellar quality, and stability in a time of significant change.... It has been a great privilege to serve with him, for I admire him deeply and know, in daily ways, his strong commitment to our college. But we rejoice with him as he moves on to other personal tasks and opportunities which we know will give him much pleasure." A search committee made up of representatives from the faculty, trustees, administration, and student body has begun a national search for a new chief academic officer, but their task will not be easy.

"I have no idea what size his feet are," said Dean for Academic Outreach Kathleen Stinehart, "but regardless, he's leaving big shoes to fill."

Cornett-Scott Plants the Seeds of Faith

Andrea Cornett-Scott, Mary Baldwin's director of African-American affairs and multicultural understanding, felt a call to start a new church in Lexington, VA, and she answered. The congregation of Christ

Our Redeemer AME Church is temporarily housed in St. Patrick's Catholic Church. The first service took place on July 16.

When the new church is fully operational, Cornett-Scott plans to change the name to Greater Things AME Church. She plans to reach out to single women, one-parent families, and women who come from a background of abuse. She also wants to involve the church in the lives of area college students, with outreach programs aimed at Mary Baldwin, Washington and Lee University, and the Virginia Military Institute.

Team 2000 Program Inaugurated

Fifty-six members of the incoming freshman class are participating in a new program developed to empower students in the areas of scholarship, wellness, and leadership. Borrowing from the success of the Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership, the Team 2000 program provides participating freshmen with faculty, staff, and student leader mentors to guide them through the first year.

Team 2000 operates on six principles:

- Develop mind, body, and spirit. Each individual is responsible for her own well being.
- Respect others. Each individual must value honor and integrity.
- Participate in the life of the college. Each individual is accountable for the quality of her community.
- Be open to new people, technologies, and ideas. Each individual must think critically, create, and embrace adventure.
- Accept challenge. Each individual must balance action and reflection.

- Know yourself. Each individual has the responsibility to shape her own life.

Team 2000 teaches students skills such as academic planning and goal setting, time management, and locating campus resources.

Assistant Dean of Students Angela Roth is a member of Team 2000 and has already witnessed very positive results. "Probably the most striking thing about the Team 2000 program so far is to see the benefits for students of living together and spending classroom time together. It has a totally different dynamic — we have been able to creatively address community issues with them, and they are enthusiastic participants in that process."

2000 Artist/Scholar Andrew Gurr

The Elizabeth Kirkpatrick Doenges visiting artist/scholar for 2000-2001 is Dr. Andrew Gurr, professor of English at the University of Reading in England. Gurr has served since 1983 as a director of the Globe project in London and now chairs its Globe Research Department. Gurr

A Burden Shared — MBC Speaks Out on Breast Cancer

The old adage "a burden shared is a burden halved" is as true as it has ever been. It is with this in mind that the Mary Baldwin College Alumnae/i Association launches The Full Circle - The Mary Baldwin College Breast Cancer Network. It is our sincere hope that our alumnae will use the network to share with each other their remarkable strengths and wisdom.

We are grateful to those alumnae and staff members who have volunteered to share their stories here in the Mary Baldwin Magazine. We are equally grateful to those of you who will volunteer to serve as supportive friends through The Full Circle.

Laurel "Lolly" Catching Alexander '71

Dedicated to Celia Flow Collins '61, whose spirit, creativity, playfulness, and beauty were wrapped in an elfin, angelic package with fancy ribbon.

If you have been diagnosed with breast cancer, "welcome to The Club." You'll hear this more than once from other "breast cancer survivors," another string of words that will become part of your vocabulary. I can't tell you not to panic, but do start reading immediately.

Knowledge is power, and Dr. Susan Love's The Breast Book was the single most useful resource in helping me decide what options were best for me. Because, guess what, you're managing your own health and outcome here. There is no one right answer. Dr. Love's web site (www.susanlove.com) contains additional helpful and up-to-date information. And talk to other women who have been through it. It helps tremendously.

Before I was diagnosed (the even some Stage I breast cancer survivors die from recurrence. Like the reality of having to take Tamoxifen for five years to reduce the chance of recurrence. Like the reality of having to have sonograms of the uterus, since Tamoxifen increases one's risk of endometrial cancer. Like the reality of having to lose all the breast tissue including the nipple if one wants reconstructive surgery. Like the 25 to 40 percent chance of having to replace the implants. (They use saline implants to give you back all your tears.) There is a lot of accepting the unacceptable.

If you're a breast cancer survivor (don't you wish we could come up with a better name for ourselves?), pick up a copy of Katherine Russell Rich's The Red Devil, To Hell with Cancer – and Back. It is funny, harrowing, and makes my experience (and maybe yours) sound like a picnic in the park. Consider attending the National Breast Cancer Coalition Advocacy Training Conference in Washington, DC, held annually around the first of May. It was a milestone in my healing process. I remember being amazed as I looked into a ballroom full of survivors. It gave me a sense of what an epidemic breast cancer really is. There were over 30 women in the breast cancer survivors' yoga class. In addition to the yoga class, we received the latest information on breast cancer detection and treatment methods, and training on how to lobby for research and clinical trials. And we danced!

Most life-changing experiences cause one to re-order priorities. A wonderful woman from San Francisco, whom I've yet to meet but talked to on the phone, said to me, "Now I really consider what projects are worth it enough to test my immune system." She had had reconstructive surgery after a bilateral mastectomy. I find myself now, too, weighing how far I'm going to push myself. Is the effort and stress of some things really worth it? And some things that used to bother me just don't matter anymore. Who has time to harbor ill will? Who has the time to take offense at someone else's unintentional actions? I'd rather be celebrating life. (I'm going to go to Italy soon.)

Now that I have taken another step in processing my experience by writing this, maybe I can finally write to Professor Emeritus of Theatre Fletcher Collins and his wife Margaret about how deeply sorry I was to hear about the death of their daughter-in-law Celia through breast cancer. How paradoxical that their son, Francis Collins, has been heading up work to map the human genome, a major step in a future cure for breast cancer. He was the top story in the national media the day after Celia's memorial service.

"Only the paradox comes anywhere near to comprehending the fullness of life."

Fionda Williams '98

I sat in the paper gown in the surgeon's office praying and singing Gospel songs of thanksgiving and praise to God for rescue while I waited for the surgeon to come in. The biopsy had been the decisive diagnostic factor. The mammogram performed a month prior and the ultrasound performed two years prior had been negative. My health care team had assumed that the breast discharge I had experienced for six years was puberty-related. At age 22, I was too young for breast cancer; they thought that a dysfunctional milk duct was to blame. The surgeon and his assistant finally bustled into the room and said hello without making eye contact. He said he had some bad news. "They found malignancy in the tissue, but it was a small bit, about 4 mm."

He continued with his recommendation: reexcision (cleaning around the area of the biopsy) and removal of lymph nodes to make sure

"Life's mishaps and horrors are only a page out of a grand book."

Max Lucado, In the Eye of the Storm

lump was found by my gynecologist, not through a mammogram), I wouldn't think of going near the "C" word. It took me quite a while after my diagnosis even to admit the "C" word; I insisted on saying I had a malignant tumor that had been removed. I was determined to put this behind me as fast as possible and get my life back to what it was before. Reality set in doctor-visit-by-doctor-visit. Like the reality that the cancer had not spread, then radiation. He concluded with what I call "the hysteria pause" – the pause that health care professionals provide after bad news – but there was no hysteria. The doctor said, "Do you understand what I've said? There was malignancy...cancer."

I nodded. "I want to do the reexcision with radiation."

This was late August. The second surgery was scheduled for mid-October. I would learn more about prayer and God's will as I continued through the summer and winter of 1998.

My mother called from work. She wanted a report on the appointment; I told her all was well. I gave my father the same report. My plan was to quietly undergo the surgery and radiation without my family knowing. I didn't think they were strong enough to handle the news. My mother's sister was coping with a complete mastectomy in New York. But my mother kept asking questions. She has this talent: she can tell when I'm hiding something. She asked daily. Finally, I told her. I was sitting on her bed as she combed her hair. She was quiet for a moment. She held the comb in her hand and stared into space before she spoke again. "Why didn't you tell me?"

"I just didn't want to tell," I said weakly. She asked who I had told. The list consisted of close friends, no relatives. My mother and I were close, and I think this hurt her. She later accompanied me to six "second" opinions from leading breast cancer specialists, internists, and surgeons in the Baltimore area, a sign of the renewed strength of our connection.

Finally, I had the second surgery. There was no pain afterward. My greatest entertainment was maneuvering my temporary drain tube in the shower and during public "outings," and wondering what my breast looked like beneath the white bandages.

My peers considered it a freak incident – breast cancer is not prevalent in 22-year-olds. I received cards and letters and e-mails from friends, professors, co-workers, and family. My post-surgery time was filled with laughter.

I had a strong relationship with God, and this time was for us. He talked and I listened. One morning I cried. I didn't want to die early, I told Him. I think there was some, "This isn't fair" and "I want to do work for you, so you can't take me now." Then softly, God whispered, "If you believe that I know best in every situation, then trust me." A great peace settled over me. God can be very convincing.

One month after surgery, I started radiation. I was the youngest outpatient on the early morning roster. Most of the patients were older African-American women, and they spoiled me. In turn, I encouraged them. Many commented that if I could be positive at 22 years of age, then they could be positive at their ages.

My oncologist wanted me to seek counseling because I was so positive and cheerful during radiation. "You don't have to be happy for everybody," she said warmly.

But I wasn't angry; I didn't hate God; I didn't hate the situation. I thought treatment was a great opportunity to share a lot of laughter and love with others. Even today, one of my greatest pleasures is going back to the hospital and encouraging new patients who are receiving treatment.

After three boys, joy filled the Smith household when Eva Carol was born. Her name meant "life's song of joy," and she was indeed that and more. She was a happy person all her life. She had a million-dollar smile and her family and friends were her priority. Throughout her school years she got excellent grades, was an athlete (playing #1 on the tennis team), and was president of the student government as a senior in high school.

In college, she did well and was convinced that UNC's basketball coach, Dean Smith, would not think of starting a basketball game until she was in the "Dean Dome." Carol knew the players' strengths and their weaknesses as well as her three big brothers did.

Carol graduated from college and became a banker. Her employers knew that if there was a personnel problem in her branch, she would eventually straighten it out. After a while, the right guy, Buck Copeland, came along, and they married and had two sweet little girls, Nan and Eire.

Seven years after her marriage, Carol found a lump in her left breast. The biopsy performed after the lumpectomy determined that she would have to have a mastectomy, to be followed with chemotherapy and radiation. This was devastating to all of us. The first week-end after all this happened, her brothers, Bert in London and Harry in South Carolina, came home to nurse her like a baby. She endured the chemotherapy with great spirit, never giving in to self-pity. She came down for breakfast every morning to get the girls off to preschool. Once the girls were out the door, she would hit the couch, but not until then. Finally, after seven months, she was declared "clean." Her hair came back and things were bouncing along nicely. Six months later came even more devastating news.

Carol's cancer had metastasized to her liver. Prayer groups were formed, and she was on almost every church prayer list in eastern Carolina. Once again, her indomitable spirit would not allow her to give up. She went to every practice of Nan's T-ball team despite the pain she must have been in. She was struggling to maintain the ordinariness of each day. Her fortitude was unbelievable. After spending a day in treatment at Duke Medical Center, she went to Nan's dance recital. Four days after the recital, Carol died. One of her friends said, "God just came down that Saturday afternoon and snatched her up." It was so quick. None of us was ready for it, but I doubt if we are ever ready when death comes, particularly to one so young. We all think Carol was "ready," but she wanted to see her little girls grow up so badly.

The local Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation "Race for the Cure" took place three weeks to the day after Carol's death. About 100 people ran in her honor. David, the youngest of her big brothers, said Carol's death brought more glory to the Lord than had she lived, and perhaps that might be one of the answers to the many "whys" of her death. Her strength, her uncommon courage, and her great faith humbled me. Many others who witnessed her strength and faith were humbled as well. God was good to let me have Carol for 35 years, and I am forever thankful.

My grandmother was diagnosed with breast cancer when I was 12 years old. She had one of the first combination mastectomy/reconstruction surgeries done in the country, a procedure immediately following the mastectomy where tissue and muscle is taken from the stomach and used in the reconstruction of the removed breast. Thankfully, the cancer was detected early enough that she needed no radiation or chemotherapy, and her recovery, though painful, was successful.

At 12, I didn't really understand breast cancer. I didn't understand what the loss of a breast can do to a woman's psyche, didn't understand that my grandmother was battling for her life. All I knew was that my grandmother was sick, she went to the hospital, and then she got better. At 22, I understand and respect the struggle that she went through much more clearly. I have heard the stories about a recovery so painful that she was forced to sleep on the sofa for a month. Her body was so weak that she needed support to sleep on her side.

My grandmother never talks about the fear she must have felt when she was told she'd lose one of her breasts, or the fear of knowing she was fighting a battle that thousands of women lose every year. Instead, she continues to live her life with vigor that many women half her age would have trouble keeping up with. Still working full time, she travels four weeks a month, often to places outside the country. She has been to places I only dream of going, and doing so is just a natural part of her life.

The reality of my grandmother's cancer hit home last year when we participated in our first Susan G.

Komen National Race for the Cure in Washington, DC. As she put on her pink shirt to symbolize that she was a breast cancer survivor, she looked at me and said, "You know, this is my tenth anniversary of beating cancer." Ten years. I thought of all the things she would have missed had she not found that lump in her breast, if she had not had a doctor who took her seriously, if she had not had that operation. She would have missed my high school and college graduations, my Confirmation in the Roman Catholic Church, and my many triumphs, both personal and public. We would have missed picking apples in the fall, Sunday afternoon shopping trips, my summer vacations away from my parents as a child. More recently, as she was reading from First Corinthians at my wedding, I realized how empty my life would have been without her love and support all of these years.

Today, I am an activist. I encourage my family and friends to have their yearly mammograms and to perform breast self-examinations. This year I organized a Race for the Cure team at work, recruiting many people who had never before participated, and personally raising over $400 to aid breast cancer research. I know it's not much, but it makes me feel good to know that I am in some way contributing to the eradication of a disease that affects so many women. And I am taking on my biggest challenge yet, The Avon Breast Cancer 3Day: an annual 60-mile, three-day walk from Frederick, MD, to Washington, DC, each May. In order to participate, I have to raise over $1,800. Avon guarantees that all of the money raised will go to breast cancer research and awareness. I can't think of a better way to honor my grandmother's struggle with and victory over breast cancer.

And I know as I walk into the heart of DC, amidst the thousands of other people walking and volunteering their time, that my grandmother will be there. For that, every day, I am thankful.

Sarah O'Connor, director of publications

Round and hard, no larger than a marble, but big enough, I knew, to turn my life completely upside down. I pretended for a while that the lump in my breast would go away, but when it didn't, I made an appointment with a doctor. Since we were living in London at the time, this meant putting my trust in a doctor I didn't know. He ordered a mammogram, an ultrasound, and a needle biopsy. Nothing showed up on either the ultrasound or the mammogram, though the doctor could clearly feel the lump. The biopsy came up clean, too. No sign of malignant cells. The doctor told me it was probably nothing to worry about, just to wait until I got back to the States and have it removed.

We returned home in January, and for a while I was busy getting the children settled back into school and returning to work myself. There was nothing to worry about, right? So I waited a couple of months and finally got around to seeing the surgeon in March. A week after he had removed the lump, the doctor phoned. "I'm really surprised," he said, "but it was malignant."

I was all too familiar with the routine at this point, having dealt with a malignant tumor in the other breast four years earlier. I returned to the hospital, where the surgeon cleaned around the area where he had removed the tumor and took lymph nodes out from under my arm to check for spread of the cancer. It was a classic case of good news/bad news. The good news: like the previous cancer, this one had not spread to the lymph nodes, it was not a recurrence of the former cancer, and it was estrogen positive, which meant it was easier to treat. And the bad news: it was a more aggressive form of cancer, and the tumor was larger than the first had been.

Lucky again, I concluded with relief. I'd go through six weeks of radiation treatments as I had before, and that would be the end of it. Then I talked with the two oncologists at the local hospital. One recommended radiation alone (and threw in that I'd be a good candidate for prophylactic mastectomy, because next time the cancer could be the most aggressive form and be throughout my system before I discovered it), but his partner recommended chemotherapy and radiation. I began to get nervous. Which doctor should I listen to? Should I consider mastectomy? What did it mean anyway that I had cancer for the second time? I began to run through all I'd miss by dying early – my twin daughters' high school graduations, seeing my sons finish college, enjoying retirement with my husband, writing the book I'd been planning. Then some women I met in a breast cancer support group suggested getting another opinion at a larger cancer center. Because I was close to Charlottesville, I chose the University of Virginia Cancer Center.

From the first moment, my interactions with the Cancer Center were positive. They knew my name and made me feel like a person rather than a number. I immediately liked my doctor and grew to have great faith in him. Never did I sense that he was in a hurry. He spent a great deal of time listening to me and providing me with information, and his attitude was consistently reassuring. He reviewed my case with a team of doctors. Their recommendation was unanimous: a mild form of chemotherapy, then radiation, because this tumor was larger and more aggressive than the first one, and because I was relatively young to have had cancer twice. They did not recommend mastectomy.

Confident finally about treatment, I began chemotherapy in May, sitting hooked up to an I.V. for two hours twice every six weeks through October. I did not lose my hair. The worst side effect was the nausea, which got worse as the drugs built up in my system. I can still feel sick to my stomach just remembering it, and I hope I never to have to go through it again, but I am certainly thankful it was available. Following chemotherapy, I had six weeks of daily radiation treatments. By comparison, these had almost no side effects.

Finally, just before Christmas, I was finished. It had been almost a year. I was weary and raccoon-eyed, my hair was straw, and my skin parchment, but I felt victorious. I knew I would soon recover my energy, and my chances of remaining a cancer survivor are excellent. I was also more thankful than ever before – for doctors and nurses who cared, for friends who stuck close, and for family who supported me through it all.

What would I say now to someone who has been diagnosed with breast cancer? First, don't panic. Breast cancer comes in many forms, and tremendous strides have been made in treatments. Second, no matter how confident you are in your local doctor, go to a major cancer center for another opinion. Physicians differ on treatments, so it is essential to pursue the most up-to-date and well-informed opinions. Third, don't settle for anything less than a doctor you feel comfortable with. I've seen too many friends suffer under the care of an insensitive doctor. I believe that having faith in your doctor can be a big factor in recovery. Last, find a support group. Women who have experienced breast cancer themselves can provide reassurance and be a fount of important information.

Celeste Rhodes, director of the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted

I have always had a reverence for life.

However, when I was diagnosed with breast cancer in November 1997, I gained a deeper appreciation of how precious life is.

Through the loving attention of my family, friends and colleagues, and students, I came to a new understanding of my connection to others. I even went through a spiritual awakening of sorts. This growth process occurred over the year of treatment and continues to this day. My choice in being open with others about my illness helped me to receive the gifts of love which were so freely given to me by my own family and by my Mary Baldwin College family.

Following a lumpectomy and after hearing the pathology report about the aggressive nature of the breast cancer that involved all 17 lymph nodes sampled from under my arm, I became overwhelmed with anxiety and fear. My family rallied around me and helped me make some critical medical decisions that probably can account for much of my success, so far, in fighting the illness.

Local doctors were recommending that I investigate stem-cell transplants at research institutions. I decided to get a second opinion at The Breast Cancer Center at Memorial Sloan-Kettering in New York City. My brother made arrangements for me to see a surgeon and an oncologist there. The mastectomy and recommendation for chemotherapy I received at Memorial were cutting edge for 1997. In fact, I was very fortunate that the oncologist was aware of a recent study on the results of stem-cell transplants versus more traditional chemotherapy using a new drug for early stage breast cancer, Taxol. I asked the oncologist what he would recommend for someone he loved dearly. He was very clear in stating the treatment which I chose to undergo. This approach is now being used as the best practice for women with early stage breast cancer that has spread to involve the lymph nodes or other sites.

I recently had the enriching experience of helping another woman who had just found out that she had an aggressive form of breast cancer that had spread to her lymph nodes. My oncologist called me one evening and asked me to do him a favor. Of course I was curious, wondering how I could help him. He asked if I would be willing to talk with his colleague's patient who was overwhelmed by the news of her breast cancer diagnosis. He said that since I was doing so well and had had an equally serious diagnosis, I might be able to help her see that there was hope and rich life experience still ahead of her. I told him I would be honored to help, and I called the woman the next day. At the end of my first phone conversation with this woman, who was about to undergo the same medical treatment I experienced, she told me that I had helped her immeasurably. Coming full circle this way in returning the gifts of understanding and listening helps me find meaning in my own cancer experiences. I call her now regularly in order to share the kind of loving care I experienced.

My philosophical perspective on having a terminal illness is what I call "informed denial." I chose to read through all of my medical records as well as current treatment practice for invasive breast cancer, but I also choose to deny the statistics concerning recurrence in order to live fully during the time I have. In truth, none of us knows how much life is ahead of us. The true gift of cancer is the heightened awareness of the joy and beauty that life offers right now. The challenge of living, as I see it, is both simple and difficult: choose to live fully in the present despite what life may bring in the future.

The Executive Committee (EC) of the Student Government Association sponsored its third annual breast cancer walk-a-thon on October 11, 2000, and students, staff, faculty, and area residents completed 2,105 laps around the Physical Activities Center track. In addition to the 10 cents per lap ($210.50) donated by EC, the event raised $300 in campus-wide donations, for a total contribution of over $500 to The Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation.

BREAST CANCER

FACTS

Breast cancer is the second most common cancer among women.

Approximately 180,000 new cases are diagnosed each year.

Approximately 44,000 deaths from breast cancer occur each year, but mortality from breast cancer is decreasing.

There is a survival rate of 96 percent if the cancer is caught early and confined to breast tissue.

RISK FACTORS

Increasing age

Family history (breast cancer in a first-degree relative such as a mother, sister, or daughter)

The presence of breast cancer genes

A personal history of breast cancer

Hormonal factors (early menarche, late menopause, late age at birth of first child, few pregnancies)

SCREENING AND DETECTION

Women between the ages of 20 and 39: monthly breast self-examinations and a clinical breast exam at least every three years. (For women who are at risk - cancer in a first-degree relative - a physician may wish to increase the frequency of clinical exams and suggest a mammogram.)

Women over the age of 40: a monthly breast self-examination, an annual clinical exam, and a yearly mammogram.

(See your health care professional for information and detailed instructions on how to perform breast self-examination.)

TREATMENT OPTIONS

Surgery:
modified mastectomy (removal of only affected breast tissue and lymph nodes)
lumpectomy (local removal of the tumor)

Radiation therapy

Systemic therapy, including hormone therapy and chemotherapy

Chemotherapy

Endocrine treatments

MYTHS AND REALITIES

Only women with a history of breast cancer are at risk.

More than 80 percent of women diagnosed have no identifiable risk factor.

Hormone replacement therapy (HRT) increases the risk of breast cancer.

According to the New England Journal of Medicine, the debate over breast cancer risk from HRT is far from over, but research presented at a recent American Cancer Society conference suggests that the risk may be less than previously thought.

Mammography is 100 percent accurate in early breast cancer detection.

Mammography detects an estimated 85 to 90 percent of all breast cancers. However, some abnormalities are non-detectable. If a patient has a lump or other change in the breast and the mammogram is "negative," the patient should discuss that finding with her doctor.

Mammography always finds cancer when it is curable.

Mammography is effective because the majority of breast cancers are slow growing and may take up to eight years to grow from a single cell to one centimeter; however, some cancers are very aggressive and can spread throughout the body before they can be detected.

All breast lumps are cancerous.

Eighty percent of breast lumps are benign (non-cancerous). Despite this percentage, it is important for women to report any breast abnormalities to their physicians.

If a breast lump is painful, it is not cancerous.

Untrue. Cancerous tumors can be painful.

The best place to perform breast self-examination is in the shower.

Women over 20 should perform self-examinations in three positions: lying down, standing up, and standing in front of a mirror (to check for visual changes).

Drinking coffee increases a woman's risk of developing breast cancer.

Studies investigating the link between caffeine and breast cancer have been inconsistent. While it was once believed that caffeine caused fibrocystic change, many health care professionals dispute that. Some women do find that reducing their caffeine intake decreases water retention and breast discomfort.

Antiperspirants or antiperspirant/deodorant combinations are a leading cause of breast cancer.

These products DO NOT cause breast cancer. E-mail has been circulating making this claim, but it is completely unfounded.

Pesticides, lawn chemicals, and/or dry cleaning services cause breast cancer.

While a number of small studies have shown a possible increased incidence of breast cancer among women who use dry-cleaning and/or lawn services, larger studies have failed to show a definite connection.

Nipple discharge indicates breast cancer.

Nipple discharge should be reported if it:

- is bloody or watery with a red, pink, or brown color.
- is sticky and clear in color or brown to black in color (opalescent).
- appears spontaneously without squeezing the nipple.
- is persistent.
- is on one side only (unilateral).

If a woman is diagnosed with breast cancer, she will lose her breast

Radical mastectomies are less prevalent in today's treatment of breast cancer. Breast-conserving therapy is much more common.

A mastectomy ensures breast cancer will be eliminated forever.

The removal of the affected breast does not guarantee that breast cancer will not recur. Some women experience recurrence at the site of the scar or in the lymph nodes that were not removed.

Chemotherapy will make a woman's hair fall out.

The loss of hair is a temporary side effect of some forms of chemotherapy, but not all. Also, as with so many facets of breast cancer and breast cancer treatment, side effects can vary according to the each patient's unique response to the drugs.

Oral contraceptive pills cause breast cancer.

No significant risk of cancer has been noted in women using oral contraceptives, even women with increased risk.

I got up early and joined Deana for the trek to the Vatican Library. We crossed the flat top of the Janiculum and then walked downhill, armed with portable computers. Bare sycamores line the street, pruned so the branches reach almost straight up, creating a majestic silhouette. The hill is dotted with the famous umbrella pines of Rome, some bent almost 45 degrees from years of wind. St. Peter's dome on the adjacent Vatican Hill peeks through the trees ahead. The view across the Tiber River to our right is spectacular: the Pantheon, church domes, the Colosseum, all bathed in the golden light of morning. The walk was brisk. We passed St. Peter's, free of scaffolding and sparkling clean for the Jubilee Year 2000. A crèche still stands in front, a reminder that Christmas has barely passed.

We arrived at the Vatican shortly after 9:00. Deana flashed her ID as we entered St. Anne's Gate and passed the Swiss Guards in their colorful uniforms designed by Michelangelo. She cheerfully steered me through the complex bureaucratic procedure, which is so typically Italian. My letter of introduction from Mary Baldwin College, two awful passport-type photos, and my passport did the trick. Now I have my own Vatican Library card, valid for 20 visits through February and renewable if I return later.

The catalog system in every Italian library is different. You quickly come to appreciate our uniform Library of Congress and Dewey Decimal classifications. Even the American Academy has its own unique, non-American system. On the positive side, the major academic library catalogs in Rome are computerized and accessible from any of the libraries. The Vatican Library houses three main collections. The most accessible is the general

Colosseum, Rome.

We left at 4:00 and trudged uphill to the bus stop. The orange city buses have the same "SPQR" insignia as the ancient Roman military standards. The sky was overcast, but a spectacular golden light bathed St. Peter's and Castel S. Angelo.

Tuesday, January 25

I saw by Deana's full mailbox that she had not returned from Siena, so I set out alone for the first time. What a good day it turned out to be! I discovered material that supports my thesis – printed texts of fourteenth century liturgical dramas from Orvieto that I did not know existed. I look forward to discussing them with MBC Professor Emeritus Fletcher Collins back home. I need copies, and the Vatican photocopy service is expensive – $4.00 for the first page of each book, and 50 cents a page after that – but the books are not available elsewhere.

Around 3:30, I left for the bus stop. I watched the new blue and orange Jubilee Year tourist busses glide around empty. No one is on them but the driver. They never stop. No one knows where to buy tickets or where the bus stops are. It is like a Giorgio de Chirico painting or the Twilight Zone. Apparently, the anticipated tourists, expecting large Jubilee crowds, stayed home, at least for the winter. In addition to poor attendance in Rome, January tourism in Florence is down 30 percent. For us, it's great: clean monuments and no crowds.

At dinner, a historian from Princeton related with horror his day at the Vatican Library. His discovery was worms, living worms, crawling in a priceless old manuscript. He presented his find to the desk clerk, who merely shrugged and answered, "We have many old books like that." The scholar was beside himself. Conservation in European libraries and museums is not what it is at home. I remember handling Signorelli's and Michelangelo's drawings in the Uffizi – no gloves and window shades flapping in the summer breeze. In the United States, where we have so much less, we are much more careful.

Saturday, January 29

I went out for dinner with a historian from Vanderbilt and Catherine Renne, an architect whose specialty is Roman hydraulics. An enthusiastic and willing teacher, Catherine captivated us with her descriptions of the waterworks of Rome, ancient onwards. She told us what waterlines lay beneath our feet and where they led. Instead of just "city water," as we have in the United States, Rome has two types: potable, cleaned for drinking, and non-potable, industrial water, which serves the fountains.

Water is not wasted in Rome. She explained that the Acqua Vergine and other ancient aqueducts still bring water into Rome. Water runs by gravity from fountain to fountain. Bernini's Triton Fountain at Piazza Barberini (17th century) is the highest on the Acqua Vergine. The water descends to the Trevi Fountain, then to fountains at Piazza Colonna, the Pantheon, and to Bernini's famous fountain of the Four Rivers at Piazza Navona, each one lower than the one before.

Roman fountains rarely have jets because of the gravity flow. Most Roman fountains cascade. The water remaining in the fountains often is routed to nearby buildings for flushing toilets and industrial uses. As gravity and topography require, aqueducts may go through buildings. The Aqueduct of Trajan runs beneath the American Academy. Near the Pantheon, waterlines have been underground since Roman times. Until recently, the pope controlled the waterworks in Rome. We saw a fifteenth-century papal coat of arms (Sixtus IV's oak tree) on a service door to an aqueduct still in use.

By the time we arrived back at the Academy just past midnight, I was whipped. And the Mary Baldwin students complain that they walk a lot in Italy!

Today's highlight at the Academy was an evening lecture by Professore Giorgio Croci, chief structural engineer for the post-earthquake restoration at the Basilica of San Francesco in Assisi. The tragedy of the devastating 1998 earthquake was compounded because, in addition to being a shrine to St. Francis, S. Francesco contains frescoes by most of the important fourteenth-century artists. Built on a hillside, S. Francesco is made up of two churches and a cloister, or dormitory, for the Franciscans. The thirteenth-century upper church – yes, one church is built on top of another – is cross-shaped, with the nave running east/west, crossed by the transept. The lower church was also constructed in the thirteenth century. The cloister – another “square doughnut” like the American Academy – abuts the north side of the church on the lower level.

The ceiling of the upper church collapsed in two places: over the front door and at the crossing of the nave and transept. In addition, the upper wall of the north transept caved in just above the oldest paintings in the church. To reach the damage in the north wall – probably a height of at least 125 feet – the engineers decided to work from a crane rather than build a scaffold. However, no crane could fit through the entrance arch to the cloister below, so a bigger crane had to lift the smaller one over the wall! Croci showed blow-by-blow photographs: crane up, crane suspended over the wall, crane lowered. My heart was in my throat.

In the late twelfth century, builders replaced the original wooden ceiling. They added Gothic arches, or vaults, inside to support the new masonry ceiling. The roof of the basilica covers the vaults, leaving an “attic” in between. Over the years, old roof tiles and other rubble collected on top of the vaults. This contributed to their collapse during the earthquake. Apparently, when previous workers re-roofed, they discarded the old terra cotta tiles in the “attic” instead of bringing them down. Considering the weight of the tiles and the distance, it is easy to see why. The restorers took out some 200 tons of debris.

Conditions inside the building were treacherous, but restorers needed access to the ceiling in order to repair it, so they erected scaffolds inside. The restorers above the ceiling talked by radio to those below. The walls of the church had moved in the earthquake, and in some places a worker could fit a hand comfortably into the crevices. Using syringes and tubes, restorers injected adhesive into the cracks to repair the damage. They had to drill into some of the frescoes to reinforce the arched support of the ceiling. This doesn't begin to describe all the other high-tech engineering used to stabilize the building. Amazingly, the church reopened in December after only two years of restoration.

Tuesday, February 1

Today was Orvieto day. The 8:15 train is semi-local, so the trip took about one hour and 15 minutes. Heavy fog enshrouded Umbria (the region surrounding Orvieto and Assisi), as the guidebooks had said to expect in the winter. Orvieto crowns a tall, steep hill of golden tufa rock. Almost all of the buildings there use tufa. The region is known for monochromatic cities, all built of local stone. Assisi is pink, sometimes bleached to a creamy white. Perugia is brown, the color of “burnt umber,” a name that reflects the color of the Umbrian soil.

I found the cathedral deserted and quiet except for the hum of the prayers of a few nuns and the intermittent hammering and ringing of cell phones of workmen in the choir, whom I could hear but never saw. The paintings in the choir are newly unveiled from a decade of scaffolding, so I had my first view. Then I slipped into the south transept chapel to savor Signorelli's frescoes in natural light.

These unheated Gothic churches in winter teach you the meaning of stone cold. I took notes with gloves on. The gatekeeper eventually returned (surely he had left to warm up) to take my ticket and turn on the lights. Although normally the harsh artificial light makes the frescoes appear garish, today I needed extra illumination. The over-life-size figures looming overhead and the intense action of the figures on the walls can make you dizzy as you look up and around to take it all in. What imagination!

As I left town, I stopped to purchase two bottles of Orvieto Classico wine for my husband David, who arrives Friday. This was a true labor of love, since I was traveling alone and already carrying a briefcase, two big books, and a couple of little gifts. And I still had the bus, funicular, train, another bus, and a walk to the American Academy to maneuver.

Friday, February 4

I woke early, eagerly awaiting David's arrival, and sat at my computer watching the sunrise. What a gorgeous sight. Clear, yellow light illuminated the trees in the park across the street and made the warm colors of the nearby buildings even rosier. David arrived around 10:00, after maneuvering through a train strike. We walked, the best way to see Rome, and drank a late afternoon cappuccino at Tassa d'Oro near the Pantheon, reputedly the best coffee in Rome. The Pantheon (c.160 AD) astounded David. The best-preserved of the Roman temples, it's huge – 144 feet wide, 144 feet tall with the largest dome ever built without metal reinforcement. We still don't fully understand how the Romans engineered it.

Tuesday, February 8

David and I left early for Orvieto. We dozed, but the train went through many tunnels, and the pressure on my ears kept waking me. It was foggy again, but less so than on my previous visit. When we reached the Piazza del Duomo (cathedral square), David turned in a complete circle to take it all in. The size of the cathedral outside and in surprised him. Then we rang the doorbell at the archives. While David dozed in an uncomfortable chair, I browsed fourteenth- and fifteenth-century liturgical books, all beautifully illuminated. How amazing it was to handle them. The handwriting and the abbreviations were difficult, plus the scribes left no white spaces on the precious parchment to separate texts. I finally found the liturgy I was seeking, and it confirmed my intuition that Signorelli had based his frescoes on the liturgies for the feasts of All Saints and Advent.

At 12:45, my archivist friend Lucio Riccetti announced that the archives would close. The three of us dined royally at nearby Trattoria Etrusca, run by the same family who owns the little hotel where I stay with Mary Baldwin students. They welcomed us like long lost family – greetings, hugs, kisses on both cheeks. Later, laden with packages, we boarded the bus (along with about 20 schoolboys) for the funicular and train. It had been a full and productive day, but the most exciting part was being able to introduce David to Orvieto.

Saturday, February 12

We went to Tivoli today, about an hour's train ride from Rome, and toured Hadrian's villa (Roman) until it started to rain. After a cappuccino, we went to Villa d'Este (16th century), landscaped with fabulous terraced gardens and fountains. It has inspired David, who loves to garden, all over again. That could be dangerous – Cardinal d'Este owned an aqueduct.

The Ovato Fountain, Villa d'Este, Tivoli, built by Pirro Ligorio, the original architect for the villa, c. 1550-1570.

Tuesday, February 15

David says he is "ruined out" after seeing so much of ancient Rome – the Forum, the Domus Aurea, the Baths of Caracalla, and the Pantheon, among others. I have shot hundreds of photos for my classes.

Romano, Academy groundskeeper and unofficial chauffeur, drove us and our considerable luggage to the airport in his little red Fiat. David rode in the front, white-faced for most of the trip, as Romano skillfully maneuvered the busy streets of Rome at about 50 MPH. When we got to the autostrada his speed doubled, which for him was business as usual. Upon arrival, Romano went inside for a cart and returned with a huge one. He made a quick good-bye, and in we went, blithely pushing our luggage. No sooner had Romano left us than a desperate man came screaming toward us, flailing his hands and yelling, "No! No!" He was a porter and apparently, when his back was turned,

Romano had pinched his cart. He unloaded us in the middle of the floor, muttering the whole time. Soon we saw him come by with about 40 Japanese women, their suitcases precariously piled on the cart. We laughed, drank our last cappuccino, and boarded the plane for home.

It's back to reality now, but I return immeasurably enriched. Fresh ideas and new photographs will enhance my classes at MBC, and new information supports my research theories. I feel energized and inspired by my work, my new acquaintances, my adventures with David, and the golden light of Rome.

The article Dr. James wrote as a result of her research in Italy, "Penance and Redemption The Role of the Roman Liturgy in Luca Signorelli's Frescoes at Orvieto," has been accepted and is awaiting publication at Artibus et Historiae.

earned his master's degree from the University of Auckland in New Zealand and his Ph.D. from King's College at Cambridge University. In addition to his professorial and Globe duties, Gurr is the director of the Renaissance Texts Research Centre.

Shakespeare and Elizabethan performance practice are among the most exciting areas of contemporary work in theatre history, especially as they inform the construction of a replica of Shakespeare's Globe Theatre in London and the performances of Renaissance plays there. Gurr has been at the forefront of that work, combining scholarship of the play texts of Shakespeare and his contemporaries with study of the theatrical context in which the plays were performed. He is uniquely situated to inform our thinking as we implement a master's degree program focused on Shakespeare and Renaissance drama in performance.

The Elizabeth Kirkpatrick Doenges Visiting Artist/Scholar Program was established in memory of Elizabeth "Liddy" Kirkpatrick Doenges '63, one of Mary Baldwin College's most dedicated alumnae. Doenges shaped the program, and it reflects her desire to enrich the academic life of the college.

Sena Center Changes

The Rosemarie Sena Center has a new name. No longer the Rosemarie Sena Center for Career and Life Planning, it is now known as the Rosemarie Sena Center for Career Development and Freshmen Services. Funded in part by a grant from the Teagle Foundation, the center is part of the college-wide focus on improving students' first-year experience.

In its effort to strengthen communications with freshmen, the center will send mailings, learn about new students, and actively follow up with students who have made a deposit. In addition, the center will coordinate the enrollment process and the official opening of the college, provide an access point for students and parents during the summer and when they are new to the campus, and link students to career services early in their college years.

Junior Captures Gates Millennium Scholarship

Giannina Garces was thrilled to hear that she was one of the 4,000 students chosen nationwide to receive the Bill and Melinda Gates Millennium Scholarship in its inaugural year. A junior in the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted, Garces distinguished herself as one of the youngest college students* to receive the prestigious award.

Garces, an Hispanic American, contributes both to the Mary Baldwin College community and to her hometown of West Palm Beach, FL, through volunteer service and involvement in various organizations. At home, Garces has volunteered in her local library and a nursing home. On campus, she has been a teaching assistant and tutor for the biology, mathematics, and chemistry departments. This semester, Garces is a PEG tutor, living in the PEG residence hall and helping new PEG students with their mathematics and science studies. Garces was also the editor-in-chief of the PEG literary magazine Horsefeathers.

Mary Baldwin Ranked in Top Ten for Eighth Consecutive Year

On September 1, US News and World Report issued its rankings for 2000. Mary Baldwin is ranked sixth among the 131 colleges in regionally ranked liberal arts colleges in the South. This is the eighth year in a row that Mary Baldwin is in the top 10.

US News & World Report assesses colleges using statistical criteria such as student selectivity, faculty resources, graduation and retention rates, as well as academic reputation among college presidents, deans, and admissions directors. Mary Baldwin ranked particularly well in the area of academic reputation. MBC also did well on faculty/student ratio (1:11), faculty resources, financial resources, and alumnae/i giving.

In addition to its traditional undergraduate program, the college offers two undergraduate programs for women (Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership and the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted) and a co-educational, non-residential adult program based on campus and in four regional centers in Virginia. Mary Baldwin College also offers a graduate program, the Master of Arts in Teaching.

Mark L. Atchison, vice president for institutional advancement, reports that fiscal year 1999-2000 was another milestone year in attracting the financial resources necessary to support the entire range of activities at Mary Baldwin College. He adds, "Our students, faculty, and staff are indebted to each of the 3,335 donors who made generous gifts to the college this past year. We recognize and thank you for your generosity in helping the college meet her immediate and long-term goals."

The Alumnae & The Senior Impact Programs

The Alumnae Impact Program

The Alumnae Impact Program was established this year in an effort to recognize Annual Fund participation in the four most recently graduated classes. The emphasis of the program is on encouraging each member of these classes to contribute what it costs to run Mary Baldwin from one to five minutes. The Class of 1996 gave $1,225.00 to buy 25 minutes and 19 seconds; the Class of 1997 gave $2,029.00 for a total of 41 minutes and seven seconds; the class of 1998 gave $1,505.00 to cover the cost of running MBC for 30 minutes and 47 seconds; and the class of 1999 gave $1,669.50, the funding for 34 minutes and 20 seconds.

The Senior Impact Program

The Senior Impact Program was established in 1998 as a way to recognize MBC seniors who participate in the Annual Fund. This program challenges each member of the senior class to impact Mary Baldwin by paying for from 30 seconds to 5 minutes of what it costs to run the college. The Class of 2000 gave $199.10 to the 1999-2000 Annual Fund to buy 4 minutes, 3 seconds, of funding to run MBC.

Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges

VFIC

Each year Mary Baldwin College benefits significantly from the generosity of business, industry and other private sources across the commonwealth through the efforts of the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges (VFIC). In 1999-2000, the VFIC distributed over $4.5 million. Mary Baldwin College received $186,682.59 as its share.

The VFIC is a fund-raising organization established by and for the benefit of its members, 15 private colleges and universities. Business and community leaders assist in obtaining contributions from the corporate community. These monies are distributed each June to member institutions according to a standard formula: 40% on the basis of undergraduate enrollment and 60% divided equally. VFIC has been recognized nationally as the premier independent college fund among 38 similar associations in terms of its annual distributions.

for learning have been encouraged by her mother, who supported Garces' decision to enroll in college as a 14-year-old, but did not make the decision for her. This lesson in independent thinking has served Garces well, contributing to her maturity and ability to focus on her goals. Since she was a young girl, she has concentrated on the sciences in hopes of pursuing a career in medicine, specifically oncology. Her mother's experiences as a breast cancer survivor influenced her choice. Eventually, Garces would like to work in Latin America, where she hopes to open a health clinic for "less financially stable" women. To experience life there, she will be spending May Term of 2001 in Latin America.

Celeste Rhodes, executive director for PEG, nominated Garces for the award because of her standing as a superb student. "I was so happy to hear that Gianina had been named as one of the recipients. She is such a deserving student of this sort of recognition. She is serious, focused, and very disciplined. We are all so proud of her."

The Gates Millennium Scholarship's purpose is to expand access to higher education to Americans who reflect the diverse society in which we live. The scholarship is administered by the United Negro College Fund and its partners, the Hispanic Scholarship Fund and the American Indian College Fund. The Foundation seeks to increase the number of African Americans, American Indians, Alaska Natives, Asian Pacific Americans, and Hispanic Americans enrolling in and completing undergraduate and graduate degree programs. Nominations come from teachers, deans, program directors, principals, and professors.

During the June 8, 2000, press conference to announce scholarship recipients, Microsoft Computer founder and Gates Foundation co-founder Bill Gates stated, "The best and the brightest students shouldn't be denied access to higher education simply because they can't afford it. Melinda and I hope that this gift will not only benefit thousands of students, but also benefit America by empowering a diverse generation of leaders."

President and CEO of the United Negro College Fund William Gray III added, "On behalf of the UNCF and its partners in the Gates Millennium Scholars Program, the Hispanic Scholarship Fund and the American Indian College Fund, I congratulate these outstanding and deserving students for their dedication to scholarly excellence. This program strengthens America by helping thousands achieve their leadership potential. We're honored to be a part of this effort."

A spokesman for the Gates Millennium Scholar Program said that a 16-year-old would probably qualify as the youngest recipient but they could not verify this until they completed further research.*

Cokie Roberts Draws Crowd as 2000 Smyth Leadership Lecturer

PHOTOS BY GRETCHEN KEMMANN AND BRUCE CORNIES

Veteran journalist Cokie Roberts told a packed audience in the First Presbyterian Church on September 25 that women hold the key to this year's presidential election. "These men are vying for our vote, and this is good news indeed."

Later in her speech, addressing students directly, she said, "You all are very blessed young women. You are getting a wonderful education and you are also entering into an economy that is flourishing and vying for you. This is a world where you are more equal than in any period in humankind."

Roberts, chief congressional analyst for ABC News, award-winning journalist, and TV co-anchor, is a political science graduate of Wellesley College. Her remarks came as part of Mary Baldwin's fourth annual Smyth Leadership Lecture.

In welcoming students and friends from the college community and beyond,

President Cynthia H. Tyson noted MBC's tradition of preparing students for leadership, an emphasis on helping women become ethical leaders that hales back to the institution's beginnings as Augusta Female Seminary in 1842 and that has become the college's hallmark. In was in recognition of this common thread that Mary Baldwin trustee H. Gordon Smyth and his wife Mary Beth '47 established the Smyth Leadership Lecture Series to enhance opportunities for students across all of MBC's programs: traditional, ADP, MAT, VWIL, PEG, and Quest, a program for thoughtful exploration of faith.

Early in her presentation, Roberts related what she referred to as her "one joke," but her dry observations and amusing anecdotes often brought laughter from the crowd. She traced the evolution of the women's vote, drawing from generations of journalistic and political history, interspersing stories about "Mama," former U.S. congresswoman Lindy Boggs, who spoke at MBC in 1960 and is currently the U.S. ambassador to the Vatican at the age of 84. Roberts related that her mother, while serving on the Banking and Currency Commission, added "sex or marital status" to the bill that outlined conditions under which lending institutions could not discriminate. She quipped, with obvious pride, "That's how we got equal credit, ladies."

Elaborating on the increasing influence of women in the political arena, Roberts predicted that presidential candidates George W. Bush and Al Gore would come out strong on issues that are near to the hearts of women: economy, health care, crime, gun control, moral values and the entertainment industry, and education. She noted that women tend to vote Democratic and that there is no difference between male and female voters on abortion and equal rights.

Roberts' lecture was only part of her nology on journalism and the political process, and violence on television. To the question of whether she has political aspirations, Roberts emphatically answered, "No!" Later, following her prepared remarks and audience questioning, Roberts and the Smyths were honored at a reception and dinner with student leaders.

PERSPECTIVES

Our Gracious God,

When we were children,
and the terrors of night or day scared us,
some loving person would say,
"Don't be afraid. Everything will be all right."

In one sense, that was a lie.

In the short run, everything is not going to be all right.

For 131 people on a routine flight from Chicago to Pittsburgh, everything is not going to be all right.

Anything can happen and often does.

But is there any sense in which our reassuring mothers and fathers were right?

In some ultimate, cosmic sense, is everything going to be all right?

Most religions would have it so.

But for us immersed up to our eyeballs

in this world and its politics, its immediacy, the promise that in the end everything is going to be all right can seem remote, unhelpful, and possibly pure illusion.

We daughters and sons of the earth, "a little worn and ragged but alive," need to be assured as surely as we did in childhood.

Give us the peace that comes from having the long view and the energy to do what needs to be done in the present.

We need the perspectives of life viewed from the mountaintop and in the trenches.

Give us that, and may your spirit be with us and light our way.

Amen.

OCTOBER 4, 2000

ALUMNAE/I ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT'S LETTER

For those of us who work in the academic environment, September is our New Year's, a time when we make resolutions and plans for a better year ahead, and I'm sure all of our students are doing that, too. By the time you read this magazine, students from all of our programs will have started a new semester of classes. The women in our traditional, VWIL, and PEG programs arrived on campus in late August, while our ADP and MAT women and men never stopped taking courses, as these programs operate year-round.

In addition to being your new association president, I am also an associate professor in business administration for the college's Adult Degree Program at the Richmond Regional Center. I am excited and honored to be the first MBC faculty member to hold the position of alumnae/i president and look forward to sharing with you, from my unique perspective, what alumnae/i of this college are doing.

With its myriad programs and diverse student population,

Mary Baldwin College is more than you realize. I hope you'll make every effort to visit the main campus, as well as our regional centers in Roanoke, Charlottesville, Richmond, and Weyers Cave, whenever you can and see for yourself how we're growing. You're always welcome.

With best regards,

Cathy Ferris McPherson '78
Alumnae/i Association President

Noshua Watson '95

by Charles Culbertson

If 1995 graduate Noshua Watson stops achieving this very second and does nothing but reminisce for the rest of her life, she will have accomplished more than many people do in a lifetime. At age 13, this native of Silver Spring, MD, enrolled in Mary Baldwin College's Program for the Exceptionally Gifted. At 17, she earned her bachelor's degree. Then, in the middle of her pursuit of a doctoral degree in economics at UCLA, she changed course to become a reporter for Fortune magazine, one of the nation's most prestigious financial publications. All by the ripe old age of 22.

Watson, who has worked as a staff writer for Fortune since January, does not take success for granted or consider it her rightful due. She has dreams for herself and believes in working hard to make them happen. She also is aware of the potent force that background and good fortune have played in her life.

Watson hails from a family in which the pursuit of education, the development of character, and the setting of personal goals are as important as a balanced diet. Her parents, Rudy and Aremita Watson, have high expectations for their three gifted offspring, and all three have risen to the challenge. Two have already graduated from MBC's Program for the Exceptionally Gifted, Noshua and Tenea '98. The third, Cambria, will graduate in 2002.

"I have to admit that my mom made me apply to PEG," said Watson. "But once I came to Mary Baldwin for the interview, I knew that this was where I wanted to go. There was nothing like it anywhere else."

So, just shy of her 14th birthday, Watson entered the ranks of college freshmen. Being thrust into an experience usually reserved for older students was a mixed bag. "It was both the best thing I've ever done and the most difficult thing I've ever done," she said. "On the one hand, the challenges presented to me by PEG and the college environment were exactly what I needed at that time in my life. On the other hand, college is tough and adolescence is tough. Put the two together...Well, let's just say there were a lot of adjustments to make."

In 1995, Watson earned her bachelor's degree in economics from Mary Baldwin. A college graduate at an age when the vast majority of her contemporaries weren't even out of high school, she was faced with the unique dilemma of what to do next. For an achiever like Noshua, however, the dilemma didn't last long. She applied and was accepted to Stanford University's doctoral program in economics.

During graduate school, Watson wrote the occasional essay and made notes for future stories. When it became clear to her after a couple of years in the program that she didn't want to spend her life as an academic, she began turning her notes into articles and book reviews and posting them on her own web site. "I wanted to try writing," she said. "I didn't get a chance to explore it in depth in college or in graduate school - in grad school, especially, you have to give up nearly everything - and it was a dream that just wouldn't go away."

"I thought that working for a magazine would be great, but in order to do that you either need experience or to know someone," said Watson. "As luck would have it, I knew someone."

And so in December 1999, Watson said good-bye to a Ph.D. in economics and hello to a job as a reporter. "Fortune, which is owned by Time Inc., is one of the few places where you can be paid a full-time salary to write," she said. "Everyone else has to freelance, to hustle all the time. I realize how lucky I am."

All those math courses she had taken, all those hours studying economics, all that writing on the side - every bit of it combined to put her in a unique position to report for a financial publication. Whereas most of Fortune's reporters come on board with writing experience and then have to learn economics, Watson already had the economics part down.

"Whenever the magazine does complicated calculations or handles a lot of statistics, they call me in," she said. "Also, having an academic research background helps me on the reporting end of things."

One of her favorite recent projects was a story contrasting the worker of the 1960s with the worker of today. "That's the kind of story that gives me the biggest thrill, the one where there's a trend or something I can reference in a pop-culture way," Watson said. "But I also like to argue the hard numbers, to analyze and crunch data, and to prove certain economic realities."

In September, Watson's co-authored piece on "40 Wealthiest Americans Under Age 40" was featured as the cover article in Fortune, and she appeared on Black Entertainment Television News.

Although Watson finds Fortune a wonderful place to work, she still has other aspirations. So what's next?

"A novel," she said. "I want to give fiction a shot."

For now, though, Noshua Watson is happy to be living out a dream made possible through her own hard work and talent.

Hero of the Environment: Lundie Spence '68

by Charles Culbertson

If you are looking for a hero, look no further than Lundie Spence '68. In 1987, Spence gathered 1000 volunteers to collect 14 tons of trash from North Carolina beaches. It was the first Big Sweep, a project that is now incorporated into every one of North Carolina's 100 county governments, and it helped win Spence the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration's Environmental Hero for 2000 Award for "tireless efforts to preserve and protect the nation's environment."

"I had the good sense to get it started and then move over and let the next level of people – who are extremely competent – take over and keep it going," she said of the project.

Spence, who was born in Richmond and grew up in Christiansburg, says she acquired her appreciation of the environment through her parents. She describes her mother, an Australian, as an avid "water-beach-ocean person," and her father, a Richmond, VA, native, as an accomplished sailor.

Spence's interest was further ignited when she became a student at Mary Baldwin College. There biology professor John Mehner introduced her to the out-of-doors application of biology. While an MBC student, she spent a year studying in Denmark and was the recipient of the Margaret Kable Russell Scholarship in her senior year.

"I have always felt that through education we have an opportunity to affect people's behavior," said Spence, "to help them make the wisest decisions possible so that the detrimental impact on the environment is minimal. That's what attracted – and continues to attract me – to a career in environmentalism."

Spence completed her master of science degree in biology at Florida State University in 1971 and her Ph.D. at North Carolina State University in 1990. For the past 21 years, she has worked for the North Carolina State University Sea Grant Program, part of a national network of marine research programs in coastal and Great Lakes states. There, she teaches graduate and undergraduate classes in multidisciplinary oceanography and environmental education and works on developing projects, ideas, workshops, proposals, and conferences. She is currently writing a chapter for a book and putting together materials for a teacher seminar on Hurricane Floyd, as well as negotiating with a public television producer to develop a documentary on the hurricane.

Believing that teachers need to understand environments in other countries, Spence teaches professional development courses for science teachers during the summer.

She has taught on soils and water in the Peruvian Amazon, coral reef systems in Belize, and tropic marine ecology in Costa Rica. This experience has led to her support of ecotourism projects in which volunteers work on environmental projects worldwide.

Spence has been a driving force in the development of a North Carolina coastal plane river and estuarine paddle trail network. In 1983, she was awarded the National Marine Science Educator of the Year Award and later was the recipient of the North Carolina Governor's Award for Conservation and Communications. In 1992, Spence was chosen to receive the Sesquicentennial Medallion from Mary Baldwin College, an award given to 50 alumnae who had brought recognition and honor to the college through their achievements.

Working to change people's thinking about the environment can sometimes seem like an uphill battle. Despite the challenges, Lundie Spence remains optimistic. "Once people get into the environment and see how beautiful it is and what it does for their souls, there is a greater chance that they will put their mouths, votes, and money where their good experiences have been and work to preserve the environment," she said.

A Moveable Feast: Melissa Woods '90

by Martha Gates '78

Planning a party? Entertaining some VIPs at home? Trying to figure out what to have for dinner? If you live in the Charlotte, NC, metropolitan area, help is a phone call away. Melissa Woods '90 is the owner of Menu By Melissa, a personal chef service. Her business offers menu planning, grocery shopping, and an in-home chef service.

Menu by Melissa started part time in June of 1996 and became a full-time venture in June of 1998. "I love my work and have fun everyday," she said. "Whether you are planning a special event or just dinner for the family, my company can help make your life a little easier."

"We don't just prepare meals. We typically plan a customized menu with meal options for one to two weeks to meet the clients' dietary needs and requirements. We prepare the meals in the clients' homes and package the meals with nutritional analyses and finishing instructions included. We clean up and take out the trash when we leave, and the dinner is there ready to be served when the client comes home. The service can even be scheduled regularly so there are always meals available to our clients and their families."

In addition to meal preparation, Menu By Melissa helps clients with their parties and entertaining needs and will gladly take on the responsibility for flowers, rental of china, flatware, glasses, serving pieces, bartenders and serving staff, and decorations as needed.

Menu By Melissa evolved from Woods' love for cooking. It melded nicely with her interests in finance and marketing communications. As a student, she majored in marketing communications and minored in computer information systems. "I use my marketing and computer skills nearly every day." She recently created the company's web page, www.menubyme.com.

Woods' client base has grown to more than 200 in four years, and she has one full-time assistant. Besides her Charlotte area clients, Woods recently added O: The Oprah Magazine of New York City to her list of clients. She explains, "One of their employees, who lives in Charlotte, had just become a father for the third and fourth time (twins) and the magazine called Hearst Publishing down here and asked what an appropriate gift would be for the family. The folks at Hearst said they knew the perfect gift and gave them my name. It was a wonderful experience."

To help you prepare for the upcoming holiday season, Woods has included a recipe for Smoked Salmon Cheesecake. This original creation can be prepared ahead of time and frozen. Then you can simply thaw, garnish with red onions, hard-boiled eggs, and capers and serve for brunch or a holiday party. It pairs fabulously with the Horseradish Sauce recipe also included.

Smoked Salmon Cheesecake

2 oz. walnuts
1/2 cup butter, melted
36 oz. whole milk ricotta cheese
4 large eggs
1 qt. boiling water
6 large eggs, hardboiled and chopped
Horseradish sauce (recipe below)
8 oz. graham crackers, finely crumbled
14 oz. 1% cottage cheese
8 oz. cream cheese, softened
1 lb. plus 6 oz. smoked salmon, divided
2 cups red onions, finely chopped
Capers
Bakery-fresh bread or gourmet crackers

- Preheat the oven to 300 degrees.
 - In a food processor fitted with the chopping blade, combine walnuts and graham cracker crumbs and process until mixture is finely chopped. Slowly add the butter and process until mixture binds together.
 - Press the crumb mixture firmly over the bottom and partly up the sides of one 12" springform pan or two 6" springform pans.
 - Puree the cottage cheese, ricotta cheese, and cream cheese in a food processor until smooth. Add one egg at a time, blending after each addition until the mixture is smooth.
 - Place mixture in mixing bowl. Chop the 6 oz. of smoked salmon and stir into cheesecake mixture.
 - Pour cheesecake mixture into prepared springform pan(s) and place in preheated oven. Place the boiling water in an ovenproof container below the cheesecake(s). Reduce the oven temperature to 250 degrees and bake for approximately 45 to 60 minutes or until set.
 - Remove from oven to cool. When cool, remove from springform pan. At this point, the cheesecake may be frozen for up to 3 months. To freeze: wrap tightly in plastic wrap and secure in airtight freezer bag.
- To serve: place the cheesecake on serving platter. Surround the sides in an alternating pattern of red onions, hardboiled eggs, and capers. Roll each slice of the remaining smoked salmon and garnish the top of the cheesecake. Sprinkle with a few red onions, hardboiled eggs, and capers. Serve at room temperature with the horseradish sauce and bakery-fresh bread or crackers.

Horseradish Sauce

1 pint heavy whipping cream
White pepper, to taste
6 oz. horseradish
Italian parsley, garnish
Salt, to taste

Place the heavy whipping cream in a medium-mixing bowl. Whisk by hand or with mixer until it holds a stiff peak. Stir in the horseradish. Combine and adjust seasonings as needed. Cover and refrigerate until serving time. Garnish with a sprig of Italian parsley and serve with the Smoked Salmon Cheesecake. This sauce also pairs nicely with roast beef.

When we bought the house, we found the pair of metal rings already set into two perfect pines. The hammock was on sale for 15 bucks. This afternoon, Hamlet, the cat, decides to join me. A quick leap brings him to my chest.

I should scrape and paint the peeling window trim before the winter storms. I have a book to write.

Beneath, leaves whisper, Rake me.

Dishes, laundry, letters to be answered, checkbook to be balanced – these poor tasks are with us always.

Specifically, I

ought to read Tom Jones and put a stew on for the family's supper. Clothes outgrown demand a pruning in the children's closets. Instead, I choose to spend this minute in the backyard hammock. Aren't such moments of suspension, brief stints of leisure, themselves a kind of obligation?

Enough sun's leaked down through the colander of branches overhead to wash my face. Hamlet's lying still, his claws retracted. There, I think. That's nice enough. Reclining in a hammock on an autumn Sunday. No class to meet, no papers waiting to be graded. Sun on my face, the cat a soft, warm lump upon my chest. Listen to the conversation of the birds. Yes, fine. Well, not exactly. Not perfect, after all. In fact, it's fake. A sort of pseudo-relaxation. Virtual leisure. Counting sheep is not the same as sleeping. I'm devoting too much effort to appreciate this moment. In fact, I'm working at it. After just a couple minutes, maybe three, I even ask myself, Okay, how long was that? Long enough to qualify as break? Restlessness and duty start to itch.

What's bred this darned impatience, this suspicion of a down time? Have I slipped out of practice? When else have I enjoyed a guilt-free goofing off? In the middle of my fourteenth summer, a case of mono kept me from a typing class and made me miss my weekly Boy Scout meetings. Restricted to my bed, I worked for hours on a jigsaw puzzle, spreading out the pieces on the solid surface of a card table that lay collapsed upon the covers. Finished, the puzzle picture showed a lanky man smoking a corn cob pipe while sitting on a cabin's shady porch, his legs crossed at the ankles, boots propped on the railing, his gaze directed to the trees. That, I thought then – and still want to think – is surely leisure. Earned indolence. Edenic quietude. Did I enjoy it then, those days in bed? Surely not. Leisure is a healthy, chosen occupation.

Mere idleness is not the same. Found moments of inaction start to fill with calisthenics of the mind, reaching back to yesterday's hurtful remark, stretching for an image of tomorrow's triumph. It's way beyond the physical. I can sit for half an hour at this keyboard – or stretched across my bed – and still be working. Drafting sentences. Rehearsing lectures. Listing my week's errands and appointments.

All those hot pursuits our culture elevates as leisure seem to miss the mark. Sport is by its very nature work – hard work, for some of us. Travel carries an itinerary. Entertainment burdens us with preparation, expectation. Leisure, I mean the real McCoy, can't be strictly measured by a curtain's rise and fall, nor by the route one tramps across a golf course, an active enterprise of stride and swing and concentration. So where is leisure found? Maybe, like the mind's subconscious, it hibernates deep down? Once you start to catalogue and question, leisure vanishes – or changes into something else.

Freud tells us work and love are the twin symptoms of a healthy psyche. Somewhere along the way, did we conjoin these into love of work?

It's popular to blame our leisure's weight loss on modernity. And it's a centuries-old argument. In Adam Bede, George Eliot asserts, "Leisure is gone – gone where the spinning wheels are gone, and the pack-horses, and the slow wagons, and the peddlars.... Ingenious philosophers will tell you, perhaps, that the great work of the steam-engine is to create leisure for mankind. Do not believe them; it only creates a vacuum for eager thoughts to rush in." Now our treadmills run on megahertz. Demands stream in at laser optic speed. Citizens of a world-wide borough, we're enmeshed in a virtual web of civic and commercial obligations and concerns.

It isn't instinct, maybe leisure is an attitude, an open meadow in the mind. If, perversely, I feel pressured on a slow, unstructured Sunday afternoon like this, maybe I should trust those Buddhist monks who teach how total relaxation comes with practice, how familiarity breeds contentment. Take the cat. Before the age of 35, I never knew a cat. We took in Hamlet when his owner moved away. Over the months and years, we've grown accustomed to each other's face. Look at us now. Snuggled like two honeymooners in this shady bower. No, it's a flawed analogy. How can I forget the claw that rakes my hairline in the pre-dawn hours, his way of asking (asking?) that I let him out? How can I ignore the vacuuming for fleas? Relationships – even of the inter-species sort – are born of sacrifice and work; repetition by itself is not enough. Even the marriage of these metaphors is crafted and unnatural, "worked over." John Keats was full of bunk: nothing springs as naturally as leaves on trees, except for leaves.

Maybe, then, pure leisure is a myth. Maybe, like the wispiest of Plato's forms, what most inspires us is simply its idea, its vague, delicious possibility. This must be the reason why I like the presence of a hammock in my yard, a hammock I inhabit one slim hour (the total of 10-minute bits and pieces) every year. Of course, there are some vigorous competing myths. Ye shall know them by their works – not by their daydreams or their quiet moments. Work hard, play hard. Publish or perish. Idle fingers are the devil's workshop. The surest way of killing time is working it to death. When I'm dead, I'll sleep.

But now I'm drifting into zeitgeist. These noisy admonitions must be silenced or ignored. Otherwise I stand no chance of catching that soft sigh of satisfaction loosed from a single soul at leisure.

If anyone can guide me to the heart of leisure, Hamlet can. This afternoon provides him birds and squirrels for stalking; a goldfinch nibbles at the feeder. An unfenced neighborhood invites his feline prow. But for now he seems content to lie here like some furry afghan, curled between my body and the sun. What's he got that I ain't got? Nothing I can see – unless it is that tongue. I hadn't noticed it at first, but half an inch of bright pink cat tongue stands straight under Hamlet's nose, so motionless you might mistake it for a rosy smudge. I try my own tongue, working hard to emulate the mind – the tongue – of cat. It doesn't happen. Too short or muscular, too cozy in its cluttered cave, it finds the stretch unnatural. So I remain excluded from the world of cat, unequipped to taste whatever Hamlet tastes. A snake detects heat with its busy tongue. And what does Hamlet taste with his? The mingled temperatures of autumn air? The heat of hidden rodents laboring? Rich tang of the decaying leaves? Scents of a garden buried, some unhurried Eden lost to us?
